Tucker Addresses Lawyers

The Savannah Morning News of June 3 in publishing Hon. Harry St. G. Tucker's address to the Georgia Bar Association on the general welfare clause at Savannah early this month, interviewed with the reports some pleasing notes about our congressman, Mr. Tucker, which are published below:

The principal address of the 1927 meeting of the Georgia Bar Association was delivered yesterday at Tybee by Hon. St. George Tucker, of Virginia, one of the most scholarly members of the Virginia delegation in the congress, distinguished for his legal attainments, prominent in the councils of the American Bar Association, and nationally known for the persuasive powers of his discourses.

His address to the Georgia Bar Association dealt with the general welfare clause of the federal constitution, particularly pertaining to Justice Story's thought. It was a carefully thought out and prepared paper, exhaustive in its treatment, replete with sound argument, convincing in its conclusions. The address was too lengthy to print in full, and while absorbing the attention of the members of the Georgia bar, it is permissible to print only some abstracts from it. These, to the lawyers, may not be the most vital portions of the able address, but to the layman and lawyer alike the passages selected appeal to the imagination, even though the date of their delivery be far distant from the actual events described by Mr. Tucker.

Beginning with the program as unfolded yesterday, Henry St. George Tucker, scheduled to make the annual address, began his paper upon constitutional law promptly at 11 o'clock, being briefly introduced by President Grier. The address was profoundly learned, indicating careful preparation and the speaker was accorded the closest attention throughout the two hours he consumed. The pavilion resembled more of a classroom than a convention, in that a huge blackboard, upon which the speaker chalked the more important divisions of his subject, was frequently used, constantly suggestive of a university lecture.

The Virginian is easily one of the most distinguished authorities on the constitutional law in the United States. According to Congressman Edwards, a place was made for him on the judicial committee, although the quote had been filed. He is the author of various constitutional treatises, was dean of the law department of Washington and Lee University and is a former president, as is Judge Melvin, of the American Bar Association. His address yesterday, according to trained legal minds, was a classic of its kind.—Rockbridge News.

ODD WAYS YIELD TO MODERN TREND

Americans Cause Important Changes in Albania.

TIRANA, Albania.—Picturesque costumes of Albania are succumbing to progress, and America has a large share in causing the metamorphosis. Albanians have been called "more Turkish than the Turks" because of their faithful adherence to traditions imported by Mohammedan invaders centuries ago. Recently an Italian ship which arrived during the fast of Ramadan, a 30-day period in which no Moslem is supposed to eat or work before 4 p. m., had to go back without landing its cargo.

The United States government came in conflict with the Mohammedan faith in its purchase of a site for a new legation. The woman owner of the site refused to allow heretofore to be seen unveiled for legal identification in transferring the site until she was convinced that a man had seen her face once before, and then she permitted him to see it as a condition that she was outside the city limits of Tirana, and an Albanian law prohibits foreigners from owning property except in cities, so the authorities accordingly extended the city limits.

U. F. Fultz of Washington, a graduate of the University of Chicago, is busy Americanizing young Albanians in the American vocational school here. He is teaching youngsters to build houses, run and repair steam engines and other mechanical occupations. American sports, particularly baseball, have been introduced.

American clothes are popular with all classes. The peasants and mountaineers cling most avidly to ancient customs, but even at weddings Albanians may be seen wearing in odd contrast to native costumes.

Of the country's 700 motor cars, 120 are American, the preference being explained by the statement that "American cars are the best climbers and swimmers," which in this mountainous country, heavily with streams, is the best of recommendations.

An American who tried to introduce modern farming methods was vanquished by the old-fashioned agricultural machinery he produced an excellent crop. But there was no market for it, as the Albanians live cheaply so he got just a little loss for his efforts. He had to pay for his grain and to Albanians live on a small quantity of Indian corn, with mutton and rice at intervals.

Tree Comes to Meet Farmer at the Barn

Pomeroy, Ohio.—Alonso Kesterson has never believed in fairies, but now—well, consider the evidence:

Mr. Kesterson, who is past the age of believing in fairies, owns a farm just outside Pomeroy. As is a habit of farmers in that vicinity, it runs mostly up and down.

Just back of the house the Kesterson farm runs sharply upward for several hundred feet. Three hundred feet up this steep slope stood an apple tree. Its apples were of a variety particularly prized by Mr. Kesterson and he bemoaned their inaccessibility.

"I wish that tree was down in the barn lot," he confided to his grandson the other morning. "I like them apples special and it's gittin' too hard to climb up there."

A few minutes later the two heard a rumble, a clatter and a crackling of timber; they turned to behold the apple tree, its roots still buried in a gigantic clot of earth, had come to the foot of the hill, setting itself in the barnyard. A bare slippery expense of feet in diameter revealed its path. The slippery clay, softened by heavy rains, had staved a landslide for the apparent benefit of Mr. Kesterson.

The tree crashed through a fence and demolished a shed. It was in bloom at the time and now is preparing. Mr. Kesterson said, to bear a crop of apples.

Gay Washable Prints for Children's Dresses

Gay prints for children's washable dresses, as well as for those of grown-ups, says the mode. Some of the floral patterns and have every appearance of silk, others are sheer, such as organdy and voile. Floured cotton creases promise a big vogue.
